

Troll

/trōl/

verb

present participle: trolling

informal

make a deliberately offensive or provocative posting with the aim of upsetting someone or eliciting an angry response from them.

Warning: may result in physical violence. Best played from a safe distance or with individuals weaker than yourself.

Our emotions shape our reality. Every day they dictate how we spend our time and who we spend it with. The goal of this game is to directly influence the emotions of one of the players in order to elicit an angry response. One player is chosen at random to be the target. Anything is fair game. Rape, the Holocaust, talk of Pepe the Frog; take turns trying to provoke a deliberate response from the chosen player. If nobody manages to anger the player then the Trolls (all the rest of the players) have to degrade themselves in some manner (provide a written and signed statement admitting defeat by the Target's hand, writing "PWNED" across their forehead with a marker, etc.) and another player then becomes the Target.
